

Awareness...becoming aware...when I wake up in the morning I become aware that there is daylight and a new day to explore.

Awareness begins the moment I open my mind and my eyes and my heart to understanding the challenges that others face...

Awareness involves love, concern, learning how to help and connect. It can also be finding out that we are more the same than we are different.

It is learning not to fear that by interacting I will then face the same challenges...

Awareness is gaining respect for the courage of those who are challenged...

Awareness is giving someone the opportunity to teach me something I did not know before, about what it means to walk in their shoes...

Perhaps these designs will help to encourage ...to reach out and let others know we care...to close a gap and learn to understand what someone else is going through...to build a bridge, and not a wall...it is with that hope that I offer you these designs.

May God bless us and help us become more ... aware.

Creatively Yours,

Wendy Meg

Notes on stitching out these designs...they were designed for woven fabrics, but will work on knits IF you use a spray adhesive to hold the knit from shifting in the hoop and I would also use a lightweight CUTAWAY either ironed on like the Pellon SF101 mentioned below or with a spray adhesive like 505. Use a clear topper also for best results. I hate puckers with a vengeance! I recently learned of a product, Pellon SF101, that is a woven cotton iron-on stabilizer...it is not heavy, but it sure does the job of creating a lovely smooth finished design. It does not make the fabric stiff at all...quilt blocks are still soft and flexible. I tested all of these designs using this.. Thank you for your purchase! Enjoy!
